

Wedding of Miss Blodgett Is Social Event of Week

Military Tinge Is Given Ceremony at Avalon by Presence of Veterans; Many Engagements Are Announced

Miss Katharine Cunnock Blodgett and Morris Hadley, son of Arthur Twining Hadley, president of Yale University, and Mrs. Hadley, were married yesterday at Avalon, the summer home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Wood Blodgett, at Fride's Crossing, Mass., in the presence of a large number of guests of the North Shore and many others who came by special train from Boston and New York.

The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a gown of white chiffon, heavily embroidered in pearls, with a pearl girdle. The court train of white satin was also embroidered with large pearls and silver thread. Her veil of rose point lace was held in place by a coronet of tulle and orange blossoms. She wore a diamond bracelet, the gift of the bridegroom, and a diamond corsage pin, also a gift, and carried white orchids.

The Rev. Endicott Peabody of Groton performed the ceremony. Miss Laura Hadley, a sister of the bridegroom, was maid of honor, and Hamilton Hadley was his brother's best man. Mrs. Samuel Sloan Colt of New York was matron of honor, and the bridesmaids were Miss Mary S. Colt, Miss Polly B. Parnass, Miss Elizabeth Remson, Miss Clara L. Lee, Miss Frances H. Ballard, Miss Katherine E. Biggs, Miss Minnie E. Richards of New York, Miss Eleanor Cabot and Miss Corina S. Higginson of Boston, and Miss Harriet L. Barnhart, Miss Mary A. Marton and Miss Dorothy W. Smith of Grand Rapids, Mich. They wore gowns of hydrangea blue chiffon with sashes of blue, pink and mauve silver cloth, and their blue tulle hats were trimmed with ostrich feathers and flowers of pastel shades. Eight of the bridesmaids carried gilded Empire sticks with garlands of flowers between and formed an aisle through which the bride party passed to the altar at the end of the beautiful Italian room where the ceremony was performed. The altar, which was covered with a rare old embroidered altar cloth, was backed on both sides with white lilies and blue larkspur.

All of the ushers were in the army during the war and several were members of the 302d Field Artillery, in which regiment Mr. Hadley was a major. They were Samuel Sloan Durfee, Seth Low, Alan Campbell of New York, William Gammell, Jr., of Providence; R. Jefferson Coolidge, Jr., of Hartford; Amory, Jr., Ralph Bradley, Lincoln Bailey of Boston; Philip H. Engle, New York; John W. Blodgett, the brother of the bride; and Kinley C. Tener, Farwell Knapp, Louis C. Palmer and Bennett Sanderson, classmates of the bridegroom at Yale.

Several nationalities of ushers were present, and refreshments were served, while music was played for dancing in the ballroom. The music was a special feature of the occasion. The Boston Festival Orchestra played in the house and the Salem Cadet Band in the garden. A special table was reserved for the bride party.

Miss Blodgett, who is a graduate of Miss Spencer's School, made her debut in a large hall at Sherry's in 1918, and was a member of Arthur J. Cunnock and Victor I. Cunnock, of Oyster Bay, and of Mrs. Norman Dittman, of New York. Mr. Hadley is a grandson of the late Euzon B. Morris, Governor of Connecticut, and a nephew of Mrs. Charles M. Pratt, of Glen Cove.

Mr. and Mrs. Hadley, after their honeymoon, will spend the remainder of the summer at Fride's Crossing, and the autumn will take up their residence in Cambridge, where Mr. Hadley will continue his studies in Harvard Law School.

Engagements Announced

Mrs. Taretien Winchester, of 940 Park Avenue, has announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Margaret Winchester, to Robert Porter Patterson, Miss Winchester made her debut three seasons ago and is a member of the Junior League. Mr. Patterson recently returned from France, where he was a major in the 308th Infantry.

From Boston comes the announcement of the engagement of Miss Susan Revere Baker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roland Morris Baker, to Robert Winsor, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Winsor, of Marlborough Street, Boston. Mr. Winsor is a graduate of Harvard, class of '05, and is with the company house of Kidder, Peabody & Co. He is a brother of Alexander Winsor, of 338 West 12th St., who married Miss Elizabeth Hope Bancroft.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. E. de Gaudin, of 133 East Seventy-third

Notice in Progress Semi-Annual Clearance Sale

for Stout Women

Offering high-grade coats, capes, suits, silk and cotton dresses, silk and wool skirts and underwear at 30% to 50% Reduction. All new style garments from our regular stock and all designed to fit and become most figures.

Sizes up to 56 bust. Store closed all day Saturdays. Lane Bryant 21-23 West 38th St.

Miss Fifi Widener, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Widener

She will be formally introduced to society at Newport this season. She is noted for her swimming and other athletic prowess.

Moonlight Festivals at

Kate's Mountain Club

White Sulphur Springs Visitors

Find New Way to Enjoy

Their Summer Vacation

Special Correspondence

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., July 12.—

White Sulphur Springs is to have a new social feature this summer in the moonlight festivals to be held at Kate's Mountain Club.

The club is a mile from the Greenbrier and can be reached by motor or by walking. Many dinner parties have been given there since the summer began and several guests have taken their guests there for luncheon and devoted the afternoon to bridge.

Mrs. Chauncey Marshall of New York gave a luncheon there Saturday in honor of her house guest, Mrs. A. G. Moffatt, who has returned to New York after passing a month here. Her guests included Miss John Herndon French, Thornton Lewis, Jessie K. Wise, James Ransom Branch, Henry Rutledge Buel, W. James Walker and Miss Edith G. Marshall.

Ellis Postelbrecht of New York, who was joined here this week by William F. Hitt of New York and Washington, who married Miss Katharine Elkins of Elkins, W. Va., has also entertained at the club, and during their stay here Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. Bailey, Jr., were frequent guests at the mountain resort.

Mrs. John Herndon French, of New York, has opened her cottage for the summer and has with her Miss Mercer French and John H. French, Jr. Dr. French, who is salmon fishing in Canada, will reach here early in August.

Miss Hilah C. French, who has always been a popular member of the summer colony, is in France, where she served with the American Red Cross Canteen Unit under the sisters of St. Robert Lansing. She may return this summer.

Mrs. Frank Hamilton Davis of New York passed a week at the Greenbrier. Paul Stamm and Mrs. Stamm of New York passed a week here. The Misses Katherine and Jeanne McLaughlin of New Brunswick, N. J., who devoted the winter to aiding soldiers in a hospital near their home, are at the Greenbrier, where they will pass the summer.

Mrs. William Willet McAlpin of New York arrived Wednesday to be with her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Harvey Close, at Patterson

Cottage. Mrs. Close is devoting part of her time to playwriting. One of her plays was given by the Junior Players at the Lenox Theatre in connection with the Finch School.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward W. McKenna of New York had as their guests this week at Patterson Cottage, Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan Bourne, Jr., and Mrs. Bourne.

Mrs. Stephen Blaine Elkins of Washington and Elkins, W. Va., motored here from her home with her niece, Mrs. George A. Percy of Boston, and Miss Courtney L. Letts of Lake Forest, Ill. Percy, who was captain of the 1918 polo team at Harvard, served with the Marines in France.

Miss Fred A. Holliday, of the British Royal Flying Corps, who has official correspondence from the War Office, is the guest of Floyd Hughes.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter A. Moore of New York entertained at dinner Tuesday evening at Kate's Mountain Club for Senator and Mrs. James A. Foley, who are passing their honeymoon at the Greenbrier.

Summer Homes Opened

In White Mountains

Mrs. Arthur B. Tuohy Among

Cottagers at Profile House;

Other New Yorkers Arrive

Special Correspondence

WHITE MOUNTAINS, N. H., July 12.—

Many well known society people are already motoring to the White Mountains, where the majority of country places opened in anticipation of a long and socially active season.

Mrs. Hamilton McK. Tuohy, who is at the Profile House at Franconia, N. H., on the morning of the 12th, for the first time, will be joined here this week by William F. Hitt of New York and Washington, who married Miss Katharine Elkins of Elkins, W. Va., has also entertained at the club, and during their stay here Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. Bailey, Jr., were frequent guests at the mountain resort.

Mrs. John Herndon French, of New York, has opened her cottage for the summer and has with her Miss Mercer French and John H. French, Jr. Dr. French, who is salmon fishing in Canada, will reach here early in August.

Miss Hilah C. French, who has always been a popular member of the summer colony, is in France, where she served with the American Red Cross Canteen Unit under the sisters of St. Robert Lansing. She may return this summer.

Mrs. Frank Hamilton Davis of New York passed a week at the Greenbrier. Paul Stamm and Mrs. Stamm of New York passed a week here. The Misses Katherine and Jeanne McLaughlin of New Brunswick, N. J., who devoted the winter to aiding soldiers in a hospital near their home, are at the Greenbrier, where they will pass the summer.

Mrs. William Willet McAlpin of New York arrived Wednesday to be with her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Harvey Close, at Patterson

Cottage. Mrs. Close is devoting part of her time to playwriting. One of her plays was given by the Junior Players at the Lenox Theatre in connection with the Finch School.

Tiny Victims of War Aided by U. S. Red Cross

Children, Sent From Menace of Bolshevik in Petrograd, Are Fed and Clothed by Americans in Siberia

Refugee Colonies Opened

Report From Commission Tells of Efforts to Protect and Care for Youngsters

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Boys and girls still laugh and play in parts of Russia, the natural buoyancy of childhood refusing to be submerged in the welter of misery and disorder that has all but enveloped the once powerful empire. Proof of this statement is found in a report dealing with the care, maintenance and education of more than 1,000 refugee children which has just reached Red Cross headquarters from commission to Siberia.

Though thousands of miles from home, cut off from parents and friends for more than a year, these youngsters—children of wealthy families and of peasants included in the group—are happy, healthy and thriving. The seven colonies established for them by the American Red Cross. In happier times the children lived in Petrograd. Their parents and all their relatives have, in many instances, been killed in the fighting and rioting about Petrograd. Too young, in most cases, to realize the tragedy that has befallen them, they romp and play as do normal youngsters in the peaceful countries of the world.

Fed by American Charity

Through the generosity of the American people they are clothed and fed and given the opportunity for study amid healthy surroundings. Their steady progress, as shown by Dr. S. Scudder who is in charge of American Red Cross refugee work in Siberia, shows that the cost of their maintenance is money well spent. Dr. Scudder, an American, had been engaged in missionary work in China many years at the time he took up his duties in Russia.

The children cared for in these Red Cross colonies located at Petrozavodsk, Ufa, Irbit, Tumen and Shadrinsk, are, unfortunately, only a small part of the great number of youngsters who were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives of all those who remained in the capital, these youngsters, known as "Petrograd Refugee Children," were sent out of Petrograd by their parents in the summer of 1918. In April, May and June a year ago, when famine and cholera, following in the wake of anarchy, threatened the lives